

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Peter Chow (chowpeter@yahoo.com) is Professor of Economics at the Department of Economics at the City College and the Graduate Center of the City University of New York. He was a Research Economist at the National Bureau of Economic Research, a Contractual Consultant of the World Bank, a Visiting Scholar at the Hoover Institution, Stanford University, and Nagoya University in Japan. Chow has authored and coauthored numerous articles in professional journals, and published/edited several books in trade and development including The Growth and Stability of A Small Open Economy, China's Modernization in Relation to the U.S., Trade-The Engine of Growth in East Asia, Weathering the Storms: Taiwan, Its Neighbors and Asian Financial Crisis, Taiwan in the Global Economy, and Taiwan's Modernization in Global Perspective.

Lowell Dittmer (dittmer@socrates.berkeley.edu) is Professor of Political Science at the University of California at Berkeley. He has written Sino-Soviet Normalization and Its International Implications (1992), (with Samuel S. Kim), China's Quest for National Identity (1993), China Under Reform (1994), Liu Shaoqi and the Chinese Cultural Revolution (rev. ed., 1997), and many other studies of Chinese domestic and foreign policy. His most recent book (with Haruhiro Fukui and Peter N.S. Lee) is Informal Politics in East Asia (Cambridge 2000).

Steven M. Goldstein (sgoldste@Smith.edu) is the Sophia Smith Professor of Government at Smith College. Goldstein has written on the Chinese Communist revolution; Sino-American relations; Sino-Soviet relations; the emergence of a Chinese Communist view of world affairs; and the reform process in post-Mao China. His recent work has focused on the Taiwan issue in Sino-American relations and the politics of mainland policy in Taiwan.

John Fuh-sheng Hsieh (hsieh@sc.edu) is Professor of Political Science and Director of the Center for Asian Studies at the University of South Carolina. His teaching and research interests include rational choice theory, constitutional design, electoral systems, electoral behavior, political parties, democratization, and foreign policy. He is the author/co-author of A Comparative Study of Referendums, Party-List Proportional Representation, Popular Will, Checks and Balances, and Efficiency: On the Values of Democracy, and On the Participation of Interest Groups in the Political Process (all in Chinese). He is also the Co-Editor of The Scope and Methods of Political Science (in Chinese) and How Asia Votes. His works appeared as chapters in many books and in such journals as International Political Science Review, Party Politics, Electoral Studies, Public Choice, Representation, Cambridge Review of International Affairs, China Quarterly, Journal of Asian and African Studies, American Asian Review, Issues & Studies, and Chinese Political Science Review.

Wei-chin Lee (leewei@wfu.edu) is Professor of Political Science at Wake Forest University, where he teaches international relations and comparative politics of East Asia. His publications have appeared in numerous scholarly journals. His most recent publication is Sayonara to the Lee Teng-hui Era: Politics in Taiwan, 1988-2000, co-edited with T.Y. Wang (University Press of America, 2003), and an article on cross-Strait economic transactions and Taiwan's domestic politics in American Asian Review.

Cheng Li (cli@hamilton.edu) is the William R. Kenan Professor of Government at Hamilton College, Clinton, New York. Born in Shanghai, Li grew up during the Cultural Revolution. He came to the United States in 1985 and later obtained an M.A. in Asian Studies at the University of California at Berkeley and a Ph.D. in Political Science at Princeton University. He is the author of Rediscovering China: Dynamics and Dilemmas of Reform (1997) and China's Leaders: The New Generation (2001). His academic publications appeared in World Politics, Asian Survey, Critical Asian Studies, China Quarterly, China Journal, China Economic Review, and elsewhere. He was a fellow at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars during the 2002-2003 academic year. He currently serves as a columnist for the quarterly journal, China Leadership Monitor, published by the Hoover Institution at Stanford University. He is working on a book manuscript on Chinese technocrats.

Robert Sutter (sutter@georgetown.edu) has been a Visiting Professor in the School of Foreign Service at Georgetown University since August 2001. Sutter specialized in Asian and Pacific Affairs and US foreign policy in a U.S. government career of 30 years. He held a variety of analytical and supervisory positions with the Library of Congress for over 20 years, and he also worked with the Central Intelligence Agency, the Department of State, and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. After leaving the Library of Congress, where he was for many years the Senior Specialist in International Politics for the Congressional Research Service, Sutter served for two years as the National Intelligence Officer for East Asia and the Pacific at the US Government's National Intelligence Council. He has published 13 books, numerous articles and several hundred government reports dealing with contemporary East Asian and Pacific countries and their relations with the United States. His most recent book is The United States and East Asia: Dynamics and Implications (Rowman and Littlefield 2003).

T.Y. Wang (tywang@ilstu.edu) is Professor of Political Science at Illinois State University. He teaches and conducts research in the area of Comparative Politics and International Relations. He has published articles in such scholarly journals as the American Political Science Review, Arab Studies Quarterly, Asian Survey, Cambridge Review of International Affairs, International Journal of Public Administration, International Studies Quarterly, Journal of Asian and African Studies, Journal of Peace Research, and Journal of Political and Military Sociology. His most recent book (co-edited with Wei-chin Lee) is Sayonara to the Lee Teng-hui Era: Politics in Taiwan, 1988-2000 (University Press of America 2003).