

Contents

Introduction 1

Chapter 1

Peter Grabosky, Where To, Next?	8
Beginnings	8
Undergraduate Years	9
Lost Innocence	10
Graduate Studies	11
Early Career Successes	14
Drastic Change	18
A Return to Research	19
A Close Call	20
An Offer Too Good to Refuse	21
Lessons Learned	22
Acknowledgements	23
Notes	23
Selected Bibliography	23

Chapter 2

Philip Reichel, From Air Force "Brat" to Comparativist	25
Developing an Interest in Comparative Studies	25
The Role of Events and Colleagues	28
A Teaching Philosophy and a Research Orientation	30
Things Learned	32
What's Next?	34
If You Are Intrigued	35
Parting Words	37
Selected Bibliography	37

Chapter 3

Irvin Waller, Harnessing Criminology and Victimology Internationally	39
The Origins of My Interest in Criminology	40
Criminology at the University of Toronto	41
Criminology Inside Government	43
Criminology and International Advocacy	44
Moral Entrepreneurship for Victims of Crime	45

Moral Entrepreneurship for Crime Prevention– Gilbert Bonnemaïson	47
Criminology Inside International Agencies	49
Criminology and Advocacy–Next Steps	50
Conclusions for Young Criminologists	52
Selected Bibliography	52

Chapter 4

Pat Mayhew, Comparative Research in a Government Environment	55
Entering Criminology	56
The British Crime Survey	57
NIJ Fellowship	57
The International Crime Victimization Survey (ICVS)	59
Life after the ICVS	61
Australian Institute of Criminology	61
Theoretical Orientation	64
Advice to Comparative Researchers	65
Note	66
References	67
Selected Bibliography	70

Chapter 5

Jan J.M. Van Dijk, On the Victims' Side	71
The First Years	71
My First Job at Nijmegen University	72
Working for the Dutch Government	73
Society and Crime	74
Promoting Victim Support	75
Leiden University and the International Crime Victimization Survey (ICVS)	76
More International Networking	77
Working for the UN	78
The Human Security Dimension	81
Dealing with the Media	82
Theoretical Underpinnings	83
With Hindsight	85
Lessons Learned	86
Selected Bibliography	87

Chapter 6

David P. Farrington, Reflections On A Cross-National Criminological Career	89
School	89
University	90
Over to Criminology	91
Ottawa and Washington	93
Longitudinal and Criminal Career Research in the 1980s	95
Diversifying in the 1990s	97
Intervention Research	100
Conclusions	101
Selected Bibliography	102

Chapter 7

Matti Joutsen From Criminology to Applied Comparative Criminology: Life as a Peripatetic Comparativist	106
Prologue: Cultural Blinkers and Criminology	106
Growing up on Two Continents	108
Getting my Feet Wet: Applied Comparative Studies within the United Nations Framework	109
Diving in Head First: Working at an Institute for Comparative Criminal Justice	111
Victimology and Victim Policy	114
Comparing What Shouldn't be Compared: Working on International Statistics on Crime and Justice	116
Changes in the Rules of the Game—Going From National to Intergovernmental Policy	119
Applying Comparative Criminology and Criminal Justice in Europe Today	122
Selected Bibliography	123

Chapter 8

Lode Walgrave, Restorative Justice in Comparison	125
An Autobiographic Introduction	125
Developments in Restorative Justice	128
Analyzing the Differences	129
Common Law vs. Civil law	130
Community vs. "Citoyenneté"	131
First Nations and Other Indigenous People	132
Conclusion	133
Selected Bibliography	134

Chapter 9

David Nelken, Being There	138
The Personal Informs the Professional	138
Comparative Criminology: What's the Point?	140
Phenomenology and the Comparativist	143
The "Insider-Outsider" Problematic	146
Notes to Budding Scholars	151
Notes	152
Selected Bibliography	152

Chapter 10

Frances Heidensohn, Finding New Frontiers to Cross in Criminology	154
Setting Out	154
Framing Feminist Perspectives	155
Naming	156
Discovering	156
Spreading	156
Debating	156
Coming to Comparisons	157
The Theory Gap	165
Selected Bibliography	166

Chapter 11

Roy King, On Being a Comparative Criminologist	170
What is Comparative Criminology?	170
On Becoming a Comparative Criminologist	172
The Potentialities and Problems of Comparative International Work	177
References	183

Chapter 12

Hans-Joerg Albrecht, From Legal Doctrine to Criminology	185
The First Steps	185
Why Criminology?	186
The Max Planck Institute for Foreign and International Criminal Law	187
Drifting into Criminology	188

Going Further	189
Studying Crime and Criminal Justice	190
Immigration and Ethnicity	192
Organized Crime and Informal Economies	194
Organized Crime	194
Informal Economies	195
Safety and Safety Legislation	196
Summary	197
Selected Bibliography	198

Chapter 13

Shlomo G. Shoham, Searching for Answers	200
An Auspicious Start	200
Capitalizing on One's Situation—Opportunity	201
The Value of Theory	202
Linking Theory to Practice	203
Searching for Answers	205
Responding to the Evolution of Theory	205
Juvenile Sentencing	206
Purposes of Punishment	207
International Interests	207
Fruits of a Labor of Love	207
Lessons Learned and Shared	207
Selected Bibliography	208

Chapter 14

Charles Hou, Adaptations	210
Culture Shock: An Awakening	210
Back to My "Roots"	212
Finding My Way	213
First "Wave" of Criminology in Taiwan	213
The Growth of Criminology in Taiwan	214
My View on Crime and Deviance	215
Summary and Perspective	221
The Future of Criminology	221
Notes	222
Selected Bibliography	223